“Daddy, It's almost eight years now since you left us for your heavenly home, I still miss you just as much. Daddy I'll always be your little girl and will always remember all the times we spent to, all the things you taught me growing up like changing my own tire and basic mechanics for my car, teaching me to drive. Thank you for never telling mama about the paddle i hid in the leaves. You taught me the necessities of watching out for myself while letting me be the girly girl mom taught me to be. Bet i was the only little girl with ruffles and bows laying under the car with her daddy helping him work on it, handing you the tools. You would tell me I was you assistant doing car surgery. Well daddy the love of your life for sixty years, best friend since childhood is reunited with you in heaven, ya'll are finely back together. Daddy I did my best to take care of mama for you while you were gone. She never stopped missing you and always loved you. until I see you again, and I will. Oh have mom tell you about how the twins have grown and turned into good looking young men. Love you forever. your oldest daughter. and side kick. Wanda Gail.

“Granddaddy you mean more to me than words can begin to express. Some of my favorite moments and memories of you are the numerous times that we spent talking to each other, just grandfather to grandson. You told me stories of when you grew up, how it was in the good ole days, and even your mischievous childhood with Uncle Bob. We both told stories about our time spent in the military and compared the difference between how it was then and now. You always liked to tell funny stories that I'll never forget and eventually pass down to my own kids. Granddaddy you were one of the strongest men that I've ever known and I thank you for being such a great grandfather and a huge influence on my own life. You'll be missed dearly on Earth, but I know you have no more pain or troubles where you are at now. I know you'll be there watching over and protecting me and the rest of the family. I'll always love you Granddaddy.
