Thank you Christa. We knew his time was limited after his diagnosis of leukemia along with his CAD. When I left him Wednesday and kissed him goodnight, he asked was he fixing to die. I told him I didn't know, but his time was limited. I asked if he wanted me to withdraw the DNR order. He said "No, I'm ready to go home." He knew he had a place waiting for him in heaven, and he was not afraid to die.

“ It's hard to narrow it down as he was in my life since I was 11. I would spend time in the summer with him and my sister we did lots of fun things. When my kids were about the same age they would spend time with them also. He stepped up to give me away at my wedding since I had no dad. When Chris was around he lifted spirits with his remarks and jokes and always a joy to be around. He will be missed and remembered forever.

Thank you Barbi. It still seems so unreal. I keep expecting him to ask if we have any sweet tea, he loved his sweet tea. I'm so glad you got to see him while he could recognize you. Before midnight, he was moved into inpatient hospice. When we went to see him on Thursday, hospice had his nausea under control, as well as his pain. We knew his time was drawing close, and those were the things that were important to us. I did not want him suffering any more. With the snow and ice, we knew we would not be able to make it to the hospital on Friday. He, evidently, did not want us to try to come on Friday; he passed late Thursday night - early Friday morning.

“ Chris was a happy go lucky kind of guy. I never saw him not smiling. And telling jokes. I loved him and Joyce very much for the past 40 years. I met them back in the 70's when we moved to next to them as neighbors at Indian creek townhouses. From day one they were both so friendly and kind we instantly feel in love with them. We became close friends. Chris will be missed but I'm sure Joyce is glad he's out of pain now. She needs some rest now. Love ya my friend. Call me when things settle down. Jeanne. God Bless your family

Thank you Jeanne. I just seems so unreal. I keep expecting him to tell me some corney joke that I've heard at least 100 times. He always was the joker, he even was cutting us with his doctors and nurses in the hospital. Him and Dusty will be waiting for us on the other side.

“ I remember the first time I met Sweetie...I felt like I knew him for ever. He was always Sweetie to me because that's what you called him, Joyce. So sorry for his loss. Love you.

Thank you Valerie. One of the nurses at our doctors office would call us back together as "Sweetie and Mrs. Decker." He always got a kick out of that. He never met a stranger and he knew all about my coworkers and felt like he knew them all as friends. Love you!
