After all, I would like to share my thoughts and feelings about him. I hope he can understand the true sentiments I held deep within—sentiments that, out of pride, I failed to express to him while he was still alive.

Throughout the years that have passed—even though we no longer walked life's path side by side—I know that he continued seeing me as the one and only wife of his life. He was a man of great gentleness and kindness toward his wife and children. Yet, between the two of us lay irreconcilable conflicts that made it impossible for us to continue walking together to the very end of the road.

He is not my ex, not my past, not my enemy. He is the man I want to love with every piece of my heart, the one I dream of forever with. He is the man that taught me what love feels like both beautiful and painful. He is the reason I cried, the reason I smiled. Maybe he's no longer mine but in the quiet corners of my heart, he will always remain my greatest love story.
