“ I miss you so much grandma. You were (and still are) my favorite person. Things just don't seem right because it doesn't feel like your gone. I go to your house and feel like you be coming down the stairs asking why am I in your house . I see your car outside the house and I feel like I'm going to see you when I go inside. I miss you soooo much grandma, I just want to hear your voice again. ?????? I love you so much grandma

“ We are heartbroken for the loss of Ms. Malikah. As working parents it is always tough leaving your little ones in the care of others, but Ms. Malikah gave us so much comfort that our little Elena was being cared and loved every day. Every little one she cared for was one of "her babies" and we will forever be grateful for that. Many prayers for your beautiful family.

“ It's still hard to believe that my grandmother is gone. She may be gone physically but mentally, emotionally, and spiritually she is still here. I will still be your guardian angel and watch over you and wake up when I think there is something wrong. When I realize there is nothing wrong I'll go back to sleep and we will wake up the next morning and I will still hear your laugh and joyful sayings. You will never be forgotten. I love you grandma ??????

“ *Malikah you will be greatly missed. You were funny, kind, sweet and real and that's why you were so great. So many funny memories and I will forever hold onto each one and laugh like it just happened. May God cover your sweet soul and cover your loved ones. Watch over everyone from heaven. “ Ms. Malikah is the name that I called her for many, many years. Ms. Malikah was my daughter's first teacher and caregiver when she was just six weeks old. I'm pretty sure I can find the stuffed toy that Ms. Malikah gave her on her first birthday. I had not talked to Ms. Malikah in a very long time but thought about her often because of the kindness that she showed my daughter and I. My heart is heavy because I did not reach out to her sooner. Please accept my condolences and know that Ms. Malikah will truly be missed.
