“ Mark I'm going to miss you. You were a friend at Buford High School who I enjoyed talking to and hanging out with had lunch with on a regular basis. A few of us played pen and paper games that were developed into the type of computer games you liked to play. From seeing all the people who are going to miss you in their online community I can tell without a doubt you had touched many around the country and the world like you did with us in school. In your own way you have charm that many never will and I know you're family is going to miss you as much as I will. May the Heaven's welcome you and I ask you keep a watch over your family and friends until we can see you once again. Your friend always, Bill.

“ Let me start by passing on my deepest condolences to Mark's family on such a tragic loss. A man so young should never be taken from his family, I am sure there is a grand design guided by powers greater than I but it is difficult to see it at times such as these.

To me Mark was Sardicus. Sard. I have known him for many years. We would discuss everything from world politics, to literature to geography. We were similar people. Both very opinionated, very passionate in our beliefs and very motivated by knowledge and the journey of learning.

We spent hours online , sharing laughs, debating, trying to one up each other and in my case defending myself against Sard's bantering on my birthplace , Canada.

For the last time I do not live in an igloo, farm seals or herd polar bears. I live on a street not the frozen tundra and my children are not named Ignak, and Tukto.

Sard made me think, feel and most of all challenged me in many ways to be better, to know more, to try a bit harder.

I will miss my friend but have many fond memories and stories that I share to keep alive. For anyone who doubts the contribution that Sard (Mark) made to peoples lives through something as simple as an online video game, don't. Sard was a good man. A good friend and most of all a true person.

God speed my friend. You will be missed but never forgotten and certainly never replaced.

Dang Nabbit !!!!!!!

“ Mark,

while I never had the pleasure of meeting you in person you have become one of my dearest and most cherished friends. We have known each other for the past eight years and we have helped each other through some pretty rough times. We literally almost talked every day over the messenger and sometimes even talk on the phone. With your uncanny humor, unmatched wit and general caring you have left a tremendous footprint in my life. I really hope you were aware of this. I miss you very much, fair tidings my friend.

My heart goes out to your mom, the rest of the family and of course Toby, Jack and little Ms. Layla.

Auf Wiedersehen, Mark.

Yours truly, Bianca

PS: Julius and Gaia also send their love, you have known both since I rescued them from animal control in Newnan and calmed me down numerous times when I didn't know what to do (and let's face it, that happened a lot :)). I'm honored that you chose the name I recommended for your new puppy girl, Layla. That meant the world to me.

I will see you again...where you ask? I don't know yet but it'll happen! You just watch and see! :)

“ My condolences to the family and his personal friends who new Mark well. I've known him on and off on his online game (World of Warcraft), but it wasn't until more recently that I got to know him in any depth. I belong to the same guild on Argent Dawn (Delinquent Society). He has touched many lives there, many who got to know Mark in better depth than I. I regret not having the same opportunity. He will be remembered well by his character's there, for, while you lost a son or brother, we lost a friend we also treasured. I will hold you all in my prayers, especially in this time of grief for you.

“ Mark, for the past year I've known you as "Sard" which was short for Sardicus. I also knew you as Saramir, Blackburne, and other random alts you played on World of Warcraft. When I met you last year, I often complained to our mutual friend that you were grumpy old man and that you wouldn't leave me alone. I was told numerous times that you teased me because you liked my company. It took a few months, but I warmed up to you. I don't know when it happened, or how it happened, but you went from a grumpy old man to a trusted and hilarious friend. I still remember asking in guild if I made gingersnaps without ginger, would they still be gingersnaps. I don't think you'll ever let me live down my gingerless gingersnaps and I wish I had shared the recipe for the "pumpkin" snaps that I had made (by the way, in my head I keep calling them Sard Snaps now.) It truly breaks my heart that I won't see you say "Aletak!" (your nickname for me that combined two of my character names) Or see you try to make up a name to combine my many characters. Or to catch grief from you for playing not just one orc, but two! Life in the game truly will not be the same without you. You weren't just someone I knew in a video game. You were my friend, and a loved member of the guild family. We didn't talk only about silly game things, we had long conversations about my dog, your dogs and your puppy, your health, my school, and everything else that came to mind. One year ago, if someone told me you and I would be friends, I would probably laugh at them. You will never ever be forgotten, even though I know your dwarven face better than your real one. And when I finally meet you, I will make you those gingerless gingersnaps. I love and I miss you, Sard!
