“ We already miss Randy immensely. He was the best nextdoor neighbor I could ever hope for. From that close proximity we became friends. He would always look out for me and my property and I did and still do the same for him.

My family and I absolutely loved waking up to the rooster every morning. It reminded me of my childhood. I'll never forget one of our first real conversations we had. Apparently someone reported to the city that he had chickens, and he very bluntly came to me and asked if I was the one who reported him. I told him absolutely not, that I actually liked hearing them a great deal, and that if I had an issue I would always go straight to him.

During that long conversation we made a promise to each other that day to look out for each other's things when we weren't around. Randy was an honest man who was straight to the point, which is one of his character traits that I really appreciate. You always knew how Randy stood on a topic. I'm proud to say they we stood together on a lot of issues.

Randy is definitely one of a kind. We need more people like him that actually stand for something. As for me and my house, we greatly miss him.

I'm still looking out for you buddy!

“It’s hard to believe I met Randy almost 20 years ago. It was a sunny summer day, and he was whizzing down the street in a golf cart in my neighborhood, and just stopped to say hello. I had no idea who he was, and he didn’t know me, but that would never stop Randy from making a friend.

We talked on the side of the road for about two hours, and by the time we said our goodbyes, I knew the history of Buford, the best veterinarian to call, where to get my truck fixed, the best handyman to call, and a promise to introduce me around to all of the “good guys to know”.

He knew everyone, and through him, I met some of the most interesting folks I’ll ever meet.

I always enjoyed our parking lot bull sessions, his colorful stories, and our late night tech support calls when he needed a hand getting online, researching the value of some object he’d acquired, or just getting the TV to work.

I’m going to miss You Randy! You were a good friend who would do anything for anyone, and never ask for a single thing in return. You had the biggest heart, and you will be sorely missed by many, including myself.

Rest Easy Buddy, and I look forward to you introducing me around when we meet again.
